Museum Studies

'My aim is to question "universal" museums as they existed in the 19th century and to understand their consequences for globalist and post-colonial representations in museums today.'

Museums arrange their collections to reflect the stories they wish to tell. Which stories are told by which objects is constantly subject to change.

This unique programme focuses on the multidisciplinary field of museology. The concepts you will be engaging with are based on research, but are also linked to ideology, and political, religious and economic power. During the programme, you will investigate the dynamics and raison d'être of heritage museums, such as those focusing on antiquities, archaeology, ethnology, history and art. A firm grasp of the cultural-historical background and international context are an essential part of this study.

The second term of the first year is dedicated to a five-month internship in a museum that matches your personal interest and ambitions. The internship application procedure is closely monitored and takes place in the first semester.

Career prospects

Whether you would like to organise exhibitions, design educational projects, manage museums, devise policy, conduct scientific research or write reviews, it all starts with a solid basis of knowledge, creative thinking and a critical attitude.

The dual Master's in Museum Studies emphasises the public face of the museum: where the visitors enter and where the collections tell their stories. It will prepare you for a position in the wider field of museum professions. You are encouraged to publish scholarly work and apply for a PhD position.

Our graduates not only possess broad theoretical knowledge, but also gain extensive professional experience. They are currently working as exhibition organisers, curators, educational employees, policy officers, project managers, researchers and directors. In addition, alumni have created an active network with regular meetings.
